

NORTH CAROLINA CENTRAL UNIVERSITY SCHOOL OF LAW PROFILE

North Carolina Central University School of Law received over 2,000 applications and matriculated 213 Day Program students and 35 Evening Program students for the year of 2012. Students are admitted only for the fall semester. Since we believe that applicants are more than just numbers, selection for admission is based upon a thorough evaluation of all factors in an applicant's file.

OVERVIEW

The law school offers two programs leading to the Juris Doctor degree: a full-time Day Program and a part-time Evening Program. The Student to Faculty ratio is 17:1. The mission of the law school is to provide a challenging and broad-based educational program designed to foster in each student a deep sense of professional responsibility and personal integrity.

Some Exciting News

The North Carolina Bar Association (NCBA) has selected the North Carolina Central University Elder Law Project (ELP) as recipient of its 2012 Law Student Group Pro Bono Service Award. This award is presented annually to an outstanding law student group whose pro bono project benefits low-income people in North Carolina. The 2011 NCBA Pro Bono Award recipient was the Driver's License Restoration Project, making this the second year in a row that an NCCU Law student Pro Bono project has won the NCBA award.

CLINICS and TECHNOLOGY

North Carolina Central University School of Law was selected for the US Patent and Trademark Office Clinic Program and was ranked 4th in the nation for clinical opportunities by National Jurist Magazine. In addition, the school added the Low Income Tax Payer Clinic in September of 2011.

Currently, the law school offers 17 clinical programs and two Institutes.

NCCU School of Law surged ahead in its effort to integrate technology with the 2011 launch of TALIAS, an acronym that stands for Technology Assisted Legal Instruction and Service. It is an ambitious project that combines teaching, technology, and the public service component that is the law school's hallmark.
